

BOOKS	JOURNALS AND MAGAZINES
In-depth and broad examination of a topic e.g. business	May be in-depth but only on a specific topic e.g. social interaction
Longer lag between an event or discovery and publication of a book. As a result... i. More complete information (causes, effects, long-term consequences, fuller conclusions, etc.) ii. Deeper analysis iii. Broader historical perspective; more contextual both within and outside of a discipline	Cover recent developments and events with little time lapse. As a result... <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Information is current but may be incomplete • Captures "the spirit of the moment" (especially newspapers and magazines) • Journals are important for reporting fast-paced, competitive or time-sensitive research
Contain original research that may cover multiple experiments or span several years	Journals have original research and typically focus on one experiment; newspapers and magazines may refer to research studies, but do not contain original research
More cumulative coverage of a topic	Limited coverage without much historical overview or context
Longer: 100 to several hundred pages	Shorter: a few hundred words (newspaper articles) up to around 30 pages (journal articles)
Published once, though revised editions may come out later	Composed of volumes and issues published on a regular basis